For the Maine Farmer Report of the Wheat Crop-1875.

As you call for reports on the wheat crop of 1875, I thought it might not come amiss to give my views, &c., on the subject. I sowed two pieces of wheat, and as the management, time of sowing, &c., were entirely different, will endeavor to give a condensed report of both.

"Let there be light!" God spake of old, And over chaos dark and cold, And, through the dead and formless fran Of nature, life and order came.

Faint was the light at first that shone On grant fern and mastodon, On half formed plant and beast of prey And man as rude and wild as they.

Age after age, like waves, o'erran The earth, uplifting brute and man; And mind, at length, in symbols dark Its meanings traced on stone and bark.

On leaf of palm, on sedge-wrought roll, On plantic day and leathern scroll, Man wrote his thought; the ages passed, And lol the Press was found at last!

Then dead souls woke; the thoughts of men Whose bones were dust revived again; The cloister's silence found a tobgue, Old prophets spake, old poets sung.

And here, to-day, the dead look down The kings of mind again we crown, We hear the sage's word; we trace The foot prints of our human race.

Here Greek and Roman find themselves Alive along these crowded shelves; And Shakespeare treads again his stage, And Chaucer paints anow his age.

As if some Pantheon's marbles broke
Their stony trance, and lived and spoke,
Life thrills around the alcoved hall,
The lords of thought await our call!

Our Story Teller. THE LONG PACK.

"Aunty tell me a story," I said, as I sat bee suse in the country.

What kind of a story do you want, Har ry?" she asked. "Grave or gay, true or untrue, pleasant or sad? For my life has Oh, something harrowing and thrilling, fearful and shocking, and above all, true—there's a dear aunty!" I exclaimed as I drew near her side, and gazed shudderingly rew near her side, and gazed sudderingly round the large gloomy room.

A little pause ensued, while aunty gazed meditatively into the fire, and I, watching her face in eager hope of the exciting tale that was coming.

I was about 16 (Aunt Betsey began at last) when I was invited to go and stay with some relatives in Sussex, whom I had never seen. My life in this old house—where I was born and have lived all my days—was compachat monotonous. I was a lively girl somewhat monotonous. I was a lively girl then, and, wild with delight at the prospect of a change of scene, I looked auxiously for my parents' permission to accept the in-vitation.

After some deliberation, the desired permission was given; so, early one morning, accompanied by my father, I set out in high spirits for my destination, arriving there is irits for my destination, arriving there in pleasant twilight of an autumn evening. She pleasant twilight of an autumn evening.
Our friends gave us a cordial reception. 'Squire and Mrs. Oldham were staid, good-tempered, rather elderly people, and their two daughters—girls of 18 and 20—as merry and as wild as 1 could possibly desire. Their names were Mildred and Janet.

The house, standing on its own grounds, and surrounded by lofty trees, was old and spucious, with many long corridors and passages, and plenty of rooms of all sizes and descriptions. I can recall so well the great entrance hall. It was of immense "You are not going to kill him!" inquired fanct.

passages, and plenty of rooms of all sizes and descriptions: I can recall so well the great entrance hall. It was of immens of sizes and gloomy, and from it secended a wide staircase which led to an open gallery.

During my stay with my Sussex friends, Mr. and Mrs. Oldham went to spend a few days at a gentleman's house a few miles distant from their own, and it was while they were absent that the alarming occurrence I am about to relate to you took lived in a cottage on the grounds about.

The household consisted of the butler and four maid servants. The coachman, who lived in a cottage on the grounds about a quarter of a mile distant, was now absent was a pompous, stately, middle-aged man, given somewhat to patronizing, though always respectful in his manners to us young people. He evidently considered the safety of the house as his peculiar charge, and side-table which stood near. Then a small side-table which stood near. Then there come a seene of doors and windows.

We had heard of one or two robberles being committed in the neighborhood; but we did not feel nervous, and my cousin placed after Mr. and Mrs. Oldham's departure—my cousins and I were sitting chatting merrily around the fire in a large room which the fire in a large room which the fire in a large room which which is the manner of the little room of a large begins the wrapper.

There was a deep silence among us for a small side-table which stood near. Then there come a scene of the foremost men of New Ends the received only by the low growings of the dog, who became manifest and my counting guard. Indeed, he remained a soldier, taking his turn with the rest in mounting guard. Indeed, he remained a soldier, as long as he lived, and trood part with the cheerful noise of his sing carpenters, and after Mr. and Mrs. Oldham's departure—my cousins covered his aideboards; there were rare and delicate wines in his cellar, and droves of deer in his park.
